the first time, and the author has been unable to find any reference to it in the literature. It is described here in detail, and its properties are discussed. The method is based on the use of a thin film of a polymer which is soluble in a solvent, but insoluble in another solvent. The film is applied to a substrate, and the two solvents are used to remove the film selectively. This results in a patterned film where the areas removed are defined by the pattern of the mask.
